Student Worksheet

The Three Branches of U.S. Government

This activity is a game that will help you learn about the MAIN JOBS of each branch of the U.S. government. You can play it with one or more of your classmates. Each card has a statement that describes one of the branches of government. Each card also has a point value.

For example:

This branch is made up of the two houses of Congress.

Statement

Which branch is it?

(5)

Correct answer gets 5 points

How to Make Your Cards:

1. Ask your teacher for some small pieces of cardstock paper or index cards.
2. Design a symbol to stand for the game. Put it on one side of each card.
3. On the other side of the card, write a statement about one branch of government. You may use these books and any other resources you have:

House Mouse, Senate Mouse, Peter W. Barnes and Cheryl Shaw Barnes (1996)How a Bill Becomes a Law, John Hamilton (2005)The U.S. Congress, Patricia J. Murphy (2002)The President of the United States, Scott Ingram (2002)

4. Next, put a point value on the card from 1 point to 5 points.

5. Then turn the card upside-down. Write the correct answer in small print.

How to Play:

1. When you have finished making your cards, put them face down on a table. Mix them up.
2. Players take turns choosing a card and asking the player next to them the question on it. If the player gives the correct answer, he or she keeps the card until the end of the game. If the player gives an incorrect answer, the card is put back in the deck.
3. Repeat Step 2 until all the questions have been answered correctly.
4. Players add up the points on their own cards. The player with the most points wins the game.

FEDERALISM QUIZ
1. FED in the States
The United States of America began as a loose alliance governed by the Articles of Confederation. Each state had its own _____ and very little power was given to the central government. This is because the original article gave a government no authority over the United States. Confederal was how the American colonies were established when power was divided between the states and the federal government.

_____ powers are called state powers. These powers are shared with the federal government.
_____ powers are called federal powers. These powers are given to the federal government.
_____ powers are called reserved powers. These powers are given to the states.
_____ powers are called concurrent powers. Both the state and the federal government have these powers.

The states, also called the "laboratory of democracy," have the power to anything that is necessary and proper to carry out their duties.
The members of the House and members of the Senate are elected directly by the people. The members of the Senate are elected indirectly by the state legislatures. The state legislatures elect senators to represent the state's interests in the Senate. The president and vice president are elected indirectly by the people. Electors from each state choose electors to vote for the president and vice president.

The states have the power to make laws and regulations that affect their state.

Cradle of Democracy

Name: _____

No one person invented the type of democracy that we have today. The building blocks were created in the classical period and developed over the centuries. The classical period covers the long history of the region that surrounds the Mediterranean Sea. Democracy was just one of the many different types of governments that the Greeks and Romans tried over the centuries. Political thinkers, including America's Founding Fathers, studied the history of these civilizations closely for lessons on government.

Athen was a city-state in ancient Greece. The Roman Republic covered almost all the land surrounding the Mediterranean Sea.

It's all Greek to me!

Almost 2,500 years ago the leader of Athens (a Greek city-state) decided to try something different – rule by the people, or direct democracy. This kind of democracy required all the citizens to participate directly in the actions of government. The assembly created laws and directed foreign policy, the council oversaw the actions of government, and the courts acted as police, judges, and jury! Back then, only male citizens of Athens over 18 were considered part of the demos, or government.

Good idea, but it needs some work

In Athens, the citizens had a hand in all of the decisions and actions of government. This system only lasted about 200 years, but it made an impact on future civilizations. This approach worked as long as it did because Athens had a small population that allowed for close cooperation. Another major civilization in the neighborhood was Rome. The Roman government had a larger territory and more people, so direct democracy wasn't going to work as well. They would have to make some improvements without losing the power of the people.

These letters are found all over Rome and represent "The Senate and People of Rome".

So What? The power of the people was handed off to a group of citizens that could act on their behalf. The Roman Republic lasted almost 500 years!

You can see the influence of Greek democracy and the Roman Republic in S.

America was too big to work as a direct-democracy. The Founding Fathers established a system that gave power to the people, and did so with elected representatives. The final product is called a representative democracy.

When in Rome...

In 508 BCE, the leaders of Rome wanted democracy, but knew they'd never be able to get every citizen to participate in government. So, a republic was born. In a republic, the citizens elect representatives to run the government for them. These representatives were responsible to the people that elected them. The people still had power, but now it was handed off to a group of citizens that could act on their behalf. The Roman Republic lasted almost 500 years!
